Donor Information: The papers were donated to the State Historical Society of Missouri by Leonard family members, Nathaniel W. Leonard, Jeanette Spencer, and Perry Spencer in 1933, 1934, and 1945, and by Mrs. Paul Burcham in July 1961 (no accession numbers). Other materials were deposited with the University of Missouri by Mr. and Mrs. Perry Spencer in October 1943 and by Mrs. Perry Spencer on October 3, 1951 (Accession CA0050). Later additions were donated by Mrs. Richard C. Tucker on October 28, 1971 (Accession CA3886) and purchased from Janet Cotter on March 22, 1973 (Accession CA3913a). An addition of copies was donated on January 1, 1990, by Medora C. Chrane (Accession CA4938). Additional donations came from Jasper and Elizabeth Meals, through Dennis Boman, on March 7, 1996 (Accession CA5600), from W.C. Everett on April 11, 2003 (Accession CA5983) and from William Spencer on June 24, 2004 (Accession CA6046).

Alternate Forms Available: Select materials from the collection have been digitized and are available online: <https://digital.shsmo.org/digital/search/searchterm/C1013>, including Slavery documents from the collection, both relating to people enslaved by the Leonard family and relating to legal cases concerning enslaved individuals.

Processing Information: The original donations of the Abiel Leonard Papers from the Leonard family were originally processed as collection C1013, the Abiel Leonard Collection. Accessions CA0050, CA3886, and CA3913a were arranged into a separate collection, Collection C0003, the Abiel Leonard Papers. Collections C0003 and C1013, plus accessions CA4938, CA5600, CA5983, and CA6046 were later combined and reprocessed into one collection.

Historical Note: Abiel Leonard was born May 16, 1797, in Windsor, Vermont, to Nathaniel and Mary Leverett Leonard. His family moved to Lewiston, New York, shortly afterward, where he spent his boyhood. He began his studies at Dartmouth College, Hanover, New Hampshire, in 1813, but left in 1815, possibly because of a scandal involving his father, a military officer in command of Fort Niagara, which was captured by British forces in the War of 1812.

Leonard made his way to Missouri by 1819, and began to practice law in Franklin and Boonville by 1820, slowly building his practice and his reputation over the next decade. In 1824 Leonard fought a duel, which was illegal in the new state of Missouri, and killed his opponent, Taylor Berry. For this he received a fine of $150, was disbarred and disfranchised. A few months later, however, he was fully reinstated, though the fine was still paid.

He remained in touch with his family back east. Because they were having a difficult time financially, Abiel's growing success encouraged his younger brother, Nathaniel Leonard, Jr., to follow him west. After a few stops along the way, Nat settled in Cooper County, Missouri, where he established a small plantation, Ravenswood, and lived his entire life. Older sister Margaret, and her husband Jonathan Bailey, also migrated to Missouri, settling in St. Louis after some earlier business failures in mid-Missouri. Although brother Benjamin never moved farther west than Ohio, he purchased large amounts of land in Missouri for speculation. Sister Mary Bell who died in childbirth in 1836, never moved to Missouri, though Abiel kept in close contact with her children throughout their lives. In 1840, several months after his mother's death, Abiel brought his father to Missouri to live with him until his death in 1844. The support and education of his entire family, including nieces, nephews, and in-laws, would remain a primary focus of Abiel Leonard's entire life.

On October 31, 1830, Leonard married Jeanette Reeves, daughter of Benjamin H. Reeves, who was one of three commissioners appointed by President Andrew Jackson to survey the Santa Fe Trail. In 1833, the Leonards build their home Oakwood in Fayette, where they entertained extended family and friends on a regular basis. Abiel and Jeanette had seven children: Mary, born in 1833, married distant cousin, Horace Everett, in 1851; Martha, born in 1836, married Dr. Joseph Smith in 1854; Reeves, born in 1838, was educated at Dartmouth and in Germany and married Alice Gardenhire in 1868; Ada, born in 1841, married Episcopal Bishop Cicero Hawks in 1864 and after his death, a Dr. Darby; Kate, born in 1844, married General Odon Guitar in 1865; Abiel, Jr., born in 1848, married Flora and became Episcopal Bishop of Utah; and Nathaniel William (Willie), born in 1851. All but Willie would have children of their own.

By 1831 Leonard's had gained considerable prestige within the mid-Missouri legal, business, social, and political communities. Several prominent business and political figures urged him to run for political office in that year and several other times throughout his career. Although Leonard did attempt a Senate bid in 1838, most of the time he chose to support his chosen party, the Whigs, through speeches and behind-the-scenes help. He decided that his family obligations and his legal career, which involved a great deal of traveling from court to court around the state, took up too much of his time to allow for political office.

In late 1854, however, the opportunity to serve as a judge in the Missouri Supreme Court proved to be too intriguing to pass up. The position again required much time away from home, usually in Jefferson City or St. Louis. Within only a few months of accepting the office, Leonard wrote, "I doubt whether the honor of the office will compensate for the sacrifice on the part of both myself and my family," and a short time later, ". . . as soon as my present term of service is over, I will accept no office – nor engage in any business that shall hereafter separate me from my family." In addition to the loneliness and the health problems that were aggravated by his travels, the sacrifice he mentioned also referred to the fact that accepting the judgeship meant a loss of revenue from the considerable fees he could receive for his well-respected legal opinions.

Throughout the 1840s and early 1850s, Abiel Leonard, like many other men of means of the period, engaged in land speculation. They assumed that the west, as Missouri and Iowa were considered in the mid-nineteenth century, had plenty of land that could be bought up and later sold to immigrants at substantial profit. Leonard and many of his family and friends bought heavily and, unable to sell as profitably as they wished, found that the taxes on the land became quite a burden. Leonard, in discussing his financial difficulties after leaving the Supreme Court in 1857, stated that, "all my means are locked up in unproductive property."

One reason that Leonard required more money than he could make as a judge was that he placed great importance on the education of his children. When he stepped down from the court, he had the considerable expense of educating daughter Ada at St. Mary's Hall in New Jersey, and Reeves at Dartmouth College in New Hampshire. Reeves was expected to continue his education for two years in Germany, while Kate, Abiel, Jr., and Willie were still to be educated at their various schools.

At 61 years old, in failing health, and in spite of his promise not to be separated from his family again, Leonard had little choice but to return to the profession of law to earn the money needed to support his family in the manner to which they were accustomed. He wrote, "I am provoked with myself – that I have so conducted my affairs as to place this necessity upon me." His reputation was such that he could command rather large fees practicing as a counselor, leaving the attorney's business to younger members of the profession. He decided that he could earn more money in St. Louis, so he spent most of his time there for the next couple of years, until his health precluded his working any longer.

In spite of the fact that they enslaved many individuals during the time they lived in Missouri, the Leonards were strong supporters of the Union in the Civil War, with Reeves serving as an officer in the Missouri Militia upon his return from Germany in 1861. Leonard continued to correspond with professional acquaintances, family, and friends, maintaining his prominence in the community and in the state until his death on March 28, 1863.

After his father's death Reeves Leonard took responsibility as head of the family until his own early demise in 1878. The estate was in deep debt, partly due to Leonard's penchant for land speculation, but also because sons-in-law Horace Everett and Joseph Smith owed huge amounts to the estate. Much of Reeves' time was spent selling off the land that his father had accumulated in order to support his mother and provide for the education of his younger brothers. Upon Reeves' death, Willie headed the family, taking care of his father's estate and eventually marrying Reeves' widow.

Scope and Content Note:

The Abiel Leonard papers consist of personal and business correspondence of the Leonard family of Fayette, Missouri, as well as deeds, contracts, wills, depositions, bills, receipts, account books, some military documents, photographs, maps, and miscellaneous material.

Because Leonard was exceptionally conscientious about corresponding with family, friends, and business acquaintances, and about keeping meticulous records of his personal and business dealings, this collection is especially useful as a study of the life and times of an early to mid-nineteenth century, mid-Missouri, upper-class businessman and his family. The years from 1820 to 1863, when Leonard died, are most complete. Records are still reasonably detailed when his son Reeves headed the family, but correspondence and other documents decrease after Reeves' death in 1878.

Correspondence

This series, the largest in the papers, consists of personal, legal, and business correspondence. Since Leonard and his correspondents often combined business matters in personal correspondence, or political dialogues within letters discussing legal cases, it was thought to be less confusing to maintain a chronological arrangement, from 1798 to 1897, with one item dated 1910, and the undated correspondence following. Some of the letters have been partially transcribed. Leonard's letterbooks – copies of his outgoing business correspondence – and his memorandum books are arranged chronologically at the end of the series.

Virtually all the correspondence prior to 1819 concerns Abiel Leonard's father, Nathaniel Leonard, Sr., who was a recruiter in the army of the United States. From 1798 to 1805 the correspondence relates primarily to military matters such as payment for finding deserters, and obtaining clothing and other supplies for soldiers. There are also a few items from Nathaniel's brother, Phillip, who was in the navy.

Beginning in 1819 the focus switches to Abiel Leonard's life. During the 1820s there are several letters from his brother, Nathaniel, Jr., from New England and Chicago, prior to his settling in Missouri. There are also letters from his parents, often concerning financial problems and requests for assistance, and a few from his sister Margaret and her husband Jonathan Bailey, and sister Mary and husband Jonathan Bell. The 1820s correspondence also begins to relate to Leonard's legal career, primarily working with estate settlements and as a collection agent for debts. Of special interest is some correspondence relating to a duel fought with Taylor Berry in 1824, for which Leonard was tried and fined $150.

There is also correspondence relating to the official 1825 survey of the Santa Fe Trail. Benjamin Reeves was one of the three commissioners appointed by the president of the United States to survey the road. Reeves would later become Abiel Leonard's father-in-law, thus some of his correspondence is included here as part of the family papers. These include a memo book, trail diary, accounts, and several very interesting letters to Reeves from George Sibley, one of the other commissioners.

From the 1830s on, the Correspondence series provides insight into the life of a prominent mid-Missouri lawyer and businessman and his family. Because Abiel Leonard spent so much time apart from his family and he insisted upon frequent communication with even the youngest of his children, there is a wealth of letters describing household obligations, educational pursuits, social activities, relations with servants and individuals enslaved by the Leonard family, and various other issues relating to family life in a well-to-do nineteenth century home and a small plantation. Letters between Abiel and his wife Jeanette, although often containing lists of specific instructions and admonitions, also include affectionate allusions. Those with the children consist primarily of descriptions of educational endeavors and suggestions of further pursuits.

Brother Nathaniel Leonard, Jr., who settled in Cooper County, Missouri, was a frequent correspondent throughout his life. His letters consist of information about family events and about his business activities, including raising livestock such as cattle, hogs and mules, and agricultural crops like corn and hemp. He also frequently asks his brother's advice about engaging in land speculation.

There continues to be a considerable amount of correspondence relating to Leonard's legal profession through the 1840s and into the 1850s. There are significant changes in the types of cases discussed and the increased respect of the correspondents for Leonard's legal opinions. When reading the legal correspondence, researchers should be also be aware that there may be related material in the Legal Records series.

Throughout the entire series are letters rife with the political opinions of the period, both local and national. Most of the politicians in Missouri during the mid-nineteenth century either corresponded with Abiel Leonard themselves, or were discussed by their friends and/or enemies in their correspondence. Opinions about Henry Clay, Zachary Taylor, and other national figures are discussed as well.

During the mid- to late 1850s correspondence from Reeves and Ada, then Kate, from their schools on the East Coast, give some idea of the social life and educational activities of upper-class youth of the period. They discuss expenses and living arrangements and, particularly in the case of Reeves at Dartmouth, their educational courses.

The Leonard family was also quite religious and there are frequent mentions of church services, opinions of sermons, and recruiting and supporting clergy. The family usually attended Episcopalian services when available, but if that was not possible, they attended services of other denominations. There is mention of helping to support Central [Methodist] College in Fayette.

In the 1850s and early 1860s, politics continues to be a frequent topic of discussion, with Leonard expressing opinions about slavery in Nebraska Territory in 1854. Several letters in the late 1850s and early 1860s allude to the national strife and the election of 1860. Other correspondence in the 1850s from son-in-law Horace Everett, brother Nathaniel, and others, consists primarily of discussions of real estate speculation.

Reeves Leonard returned from his studies in Germany around the start of the Civil War. He enlisted as a captain, and was later promoted to major, in the Missouri State Militia, fighting for the Union cause. The correspondence during the war years, though not extensive, includes discussion of emancipation, escaped slaves, contraband, bushwhacker raids, and some military correspondence. Abiel's death in 1863 is noted by resolutions of the Bar of Fayette.

With the death of Reeves Leonard in 1878, the amount of correspondence decreases considerably and consists almost entirely of Willie's business transactions. The undated correspondence includes several letters written by Nathaniel about land purchases and farming; notes relating to, or drafts of Abiel's speeches, judicial opinions and decisions; and various family missives, especially from Martha, who seldom dated her correspondence.

Seventeen letterbooks, written by Abiel Leonard and dated 1827-1852, contain copies of his outgoing business correspondence. Early volumes contain material about his legal cases, some with lengthy explanations of the laws behind the opinions. Some later letters also discuss legal cases, but most consist primarily of business matters, including lands acquired, loans made, and collecting debts. There appear to be one or two volumes missing for the year 1843.

Notebooks entitled "memorandum books" by Leonard, dated 1823-1851, and undated, conclude the correspondence series. They contain notes about cases in various circuit courts, a docket of Missouri Supreme Court cases, and memos relative to New Madrid titles. There are also detailed accounts of collecting debts and rents for clients, as well as personal accounts.

Legal Records

This series consists of legal documents arranged chronologically, 1782-1894, and undated; legal notebooks, 1820-1856; and Leonard's legal cases, arranged in alphabetical order.

Several folders of cases related to New Madrid claims are listed alphabetically at the end of the legal cases subseries. The legal documents relate primarily to his clients, but do include personal and family documents as well. They consist of contracts, deeds, wills, estate lists, land grants and other land records, bills of sale, depositions, and other notes and papers relating to his cases. Please note that the researcher should always check the Correspondence series during the proper time period for possible additional material about a certain legal case.

The legal documents subseries relates primarily to Leonard's clients, but does include personal and family documents, as well. They consist of contracts, deeds, wills, estate lists, land grants and other land records, bills of sale, depositions, and other notes and papers relating to his cases.

Of particular interest are some 1821 deeds and contracts relative to setting aside land in Columbia for the university, in Cole County for a courthouse and jail, and in Cote Sans Dessein to locate the state capital. Although the majority of documents in this section concern cases relating to debt collection, land transactions, estates, and other financial-type matters, there are also notes and depositions about cases such as an indentured 12-year-old, who had been apprenticed to learn a trade, suing his master for not teaching him, 1836; the mistreatment and death of an enslaved woman, 1839; the rape of a schoolgirl, 1840; a prenuptial contract, 1842; spousal abuse, 1849; and an 1868 contract to hire a 10-year-old servant girl until she turns 14, in return for teaching her to read and write.

The Legal Notebooks subseries consists of several legal notebooks, 1820-1856, containing Leonard's notes concerning many of his cases. Researchers should note that the material in these volumes also might relate to items in the legal documents and legal cases subseries, as well as in the correspondence series. Thorough investigation of a legal case may require examination of items from all of the subseries for the time period in question.

The legal cases subseries is arranged alphabetically and, for the most part, has been kept in the order originally placed by an earlier processor. The subseries consists of notes, depositions, and correspondence. Most of the cases concern suits for collection of payment of debt and other financial disputes. Other types of cases, involving manslaughter, murder, assault, slander, embezzlement, enslavement, etc., are noted. Cases specifically related to New Madrid claims are arranged alphabetically at the end of the other legal cases. Of special interest are the 1828 Missouri House and Senate impeachment proceedings against Judge David Todd for willful misconduct.

Business Records

This series consists of account books, dated 1822-1878, and business documents, arranged chronologically from 1792 to 1909, and undated. The account books until Leonard's death in 1863 are very comprehensive, covering both private and professional transactions, and provide a view of the workings of a law practice in the early to mid-nineteenth century. The business documents section includes bills, receipts, and listings of income and expenditures, offering insight into the financial situation of an upper-class family of the nineteenth century. Of particular interest in this series may be a list of expenditures and copy of an account of the Santa Fe Trail Commission survey, 1825-1826.

In the Account Books subseries, account books identified by Leonard as Private Accounts, up to his death in 1863, are very comprehensive, covering both private and professional transactions - including lists of clients, the service Leonard performed, and the fee charged. They provide a unique view of the business workings of a law practice in the early to mid-nineteenth century. Leonard was also scrupulous about keeping records of his own private business dealings and personal accounts.

Details of personal loans, home construction and improvements, domestic expenses and purchases, etc., provide a glimpse of the financial workings of an upper-class family of the 1800s. There are a few other books, interfiled chronologically, in which Leonard kept a separate record of specific accounts, particularly in the early years when much of his practice involved dealing with collections for clients. Jeanette Leonard's accounts are included in the last couple of volumes, but are not nearly as detailed as those of her husband.

The Business Documents subseries includes bills, receipts, and listings of income and expenditures. Of particular interest may be a list of expenditures and copies of accounts of the San- ta Fe Trail Commission survey, 1825-1826 (f. 1034-1035); bills for items to set up a newlywed household, 1831 (f. 1041); list of enslaved individuals for sale, 1845 (f. 1085); and several pages of notes and diagrams related to the building of a house, 1850 (f. 1101). The documents provide unique insight into the financial situation of a mid-nineteenth century family. Receipts and bills for general merchandise, dry goods, furniture, building supplies, books, and livestock, and for services such as education, carpentry, masonry, blacksmithing, medical care, dentistry, sewing, shoemaking, etc., provide documentation of the costs of these goods and services during the period.

A large portion of the documents throughout the subseries, but especially after Abiel Leonard's death, concern tax records of the extensive land holdings of Leonard and his estate. The documents from 1898 to 1909 relate almost exclusively to distributions from his estate to his heirs.

Military Documents

This series is arranged chronologically from around the 1790s to 1865, and consists primarily of muster rolls and general orders from Nathaniel Leonard's service in the late 1790s and early 1800s; poll books of elections of the Missouri Militia in the late 1820s and early 1830s (Abiel Leonard was appointed Judge Advocate of the First Brigade, First Division of the militia in 1826.); and documents of Reeves' military service in Company A, 9th Cavalry, Missouri State Militia during the Civil War, including enlistment records, return of quartermaster stores, inventories of effects of deceased soldiers, receipts for forage, etc.

Miscellaneous

This series consists of Leonard's notes for political speeches, Leonard family genealogy and photographs, plat maps of mid-Missouri towns, some 1832 Spanish language documents relating to Santa Fe, and several folders of undated schoolwork, including translations from Latin and Greek classics, compositions, poetry, and sermon notes.
