Introduction

Approximate 30 cubic feet, oversize, microfilm

Barstow is a private school, preschool through twelfth grade, in Kansas City, Missouri. The collection contains yearbooks, material on events, activities, and students, financial and business records such as ledgers, enrollment counts, and fundraising efforts, photographs, meeting minutes, and scrapbooks. The scrapbooks may include correspondence, school newspapers, printed and published material, such as programs and invitations, photographs, and clippings.

In 1884, several prominent Kansas City residents, including August Meyer and William Rockhill Nelson, decided that an independent school was needed in Kansas City. Dr. Henry Martin Hopkins, also part of the initial group, and pastor of the First Congregational Church, traveled to Wellesley College and brought Miss Ada Brann and Miss Mary Louise Barstow back to start a school. The school was located on the second floor at 1204 Broadway and was called "School for Girls," though a few boys under ten years of age were accepted for classes.

Although Miss Brann and Miss Barstow were associate principals, the school became known as "Miss Brann's School." Miss Brann was said to have an excellent mind and was an outstanding teacher, along with having striking physical beauty. The school outgrew its quarters and moved to 13th Street between Washington and Broadway. Miss Brann retired in 1899, moving back East and marrying Frederick O. Darling in 1902. She died in 1947 at the age of 85.

In 1898, the "Day and Home School" moved to 15 Westport Road (between Main and Baltimore) to a new large, yellow frame building that had been built by some of the school's supporters. The school yearbook, The Weathercock, was started in 1901. Extracurricular activities were encouraged and organized including Field Day, "the Pretenders" dramatic organization, a Glee Club and Halloween parties. Miss Barstow retired in 1923 to Gardiner, Maine, where she was born. She died there in 1937.

What was now known as Barstow School again changed locations. In 1924, the move was made to 4950 Cherry thanks to a gift of land from Laura Nelson Kirkwood (who had attended the school), with Rose Adelaide Witham as principal. There was a main building, a gymnasium-auditorium, a residence for boarding students, tennis courts, and fields for play. In 1954, the school purchased the former Mrs. Edwin Shields home and grounds at 5110 Cherry to use as additional classroom space and as an athletic field. As the school grew, it was apparent that additional space would again be needed.

In 1959, ground was broken at 115th and State Line for new school buildings. The school moved into their new facilities in 1962. Boys were admitted into the freshman class beginning in 1968, progressively moving into the upper classes in the following years.
