Historical Note:

Brewers and Maltsters Local #6 is the oldest labor union in continuous operation in the city of St. Louis. German immigrants who settled in St. Louis prior to the Civil War became St.

Louis's Beer Barons and their employees. Formed in 1886 the local originally held a charter in the Knights of Labor and in 1887 obtained a charter from the American Federation of Labor. St. Louis was an early center for beer production in the United States, thanks to breweries like Lemp, Anheuser-Busch and scores of smaller breweries. As the brewing industry grew so did the union.

The United Brewery Workers and the American Federation of Labor competed for the many other workmen connected to the brewing industry. The United Brewery Workers was an industrial union, in which one union represented every worker in the Brewery. The American Federation of Labor wanted separate unions for the various trades, such as coopers, engineers, firemen and teamsters. In 1906, under pressure from these trades, the American Federation of Labor revoked the United Brewery Workers charter. Severe criticism across a wide spectrum of the labor movement forced the American Federation of Labor to reinstate them and allow the union to represent all jobs affiliated with the brewing industry. The conflict between industrial unionism and trade unionism continued to be a problem within the brewing industry. The delivery drivers joined the Teamsters Union several years before the rest of the brewery workers.
